About Sittingbourne Library.

There are people who work at Sittingbourne Library who I will talk to about giving notice or attending a marriage

Sittingbourne Library is a building where you can find books to read and where people get married. Sometimes it can be very busy.

If I get overwhelmed, I can speak to staff. There will be a quiet area where I can sit.

What will happen when I go to give notice to get married and to a wedding.

When I get to Sittingbourne Library there will be staff helping people know where to go.

I can go in the front door where there is a reception desk to ask for help.

I will talk to a member of staff who knows where the notice appointment or wedding is and they will tell me where to go.

I might have to wait in the waiting room before my notice appointment, and the ceremony starts.

If it gets too busy I can go to a quiet space.

When attending to give notice the registrar will bring me into the ceremony room to have my interview and to show my identification documents. I will go in without my partner.

On the day of the wedding when they are ready to start the ceremony I will be asked by a member of staff to go into the ceremony room with all the other guests. The ceremony will begin soon.

There will a member of staff at the front leading the ceremony. The couple will have to say vows to each other and might exchange rings.

The ceremony should take no more than 20 minutes.

If I need to leave, I can quietly leave the ceremony room and wait outside in the courtyard or in the waiting room.

If it is a nice day, at the end of the ceremony we will all go out into the garden to take photographs.

I can leave whenever I am ready to go.
